PREFACE

SINCE the Shakespeare Bibliography was published in 1931, so many contributions to Shakespearian study have appeared in print that the necessity of a supplement to our former work makes itself felt. The subsequent pages follow the method and arrangement of the main work. They contain the new publications from 1930 to April 1936; furthermore, the opportunity has been taken to repair a few important omissions in the original work. The authors hope that the supplement will not meet with less approval and interest than the Bibliography itself; they would be grateful for any suggestions brought forward to fill in gaps or to improve the work done.
